DC,

Here a first draft of the plan developed by Michel and Kevin. In speaking with Kevin, it's not the best plan in his opinion as it gives up some area, with no guarantees that the trucker will comply or leave once they've moved to a location closer to Parliament.

Michel,

I know the concrete barriers are labor intense to get deployed and will still need a police presence, but how close are we to making that happen? I think the psychological presence of them may be of value. Given the coming forecast of snow and the likelihood that all the city rucks will be pulled, we should look at having those positions secured with Jersey barriers.

Including Russell and Jamie on this email thread as well.

Thoughts?

Paul
